

Quarterly Highlights

- The Victory RS Select Growth Fund (Class A Shares, without sales charge) returned 6.54% for the three months ended June 30, 2023, outperforming the Russell 2500™ Growth Index,<sup>1</sup> which returned 6.41%.
- Fund outperformance relative to the benchmark was driven by stock selection in the Materials & Processing and Energy sectors; stock selection within the Technology sector offset some of the outperformance.
- This period's performance was aided in part by the relative performance of secular growth stocks as small-mid growth, as defined by the Russell 2500™ Growth Index, materially outperformed small-mid value, as defined by the Russell 2500™ Value Index,<sup>2</sup> 6.41% vs. 4.37%, while large growth, as defined by the Russell 1000® Growth Index,<sup>3</sup> was the best performing style within U.S. equity markets, returning 12.81%.
- We believe the multi-year underperformance of innovative smaller-cap growth stocks has created an outsized opportunity for smaller-cap growth stocks, as current valuations (defined as the forward price-to-earnings ratio, excluding non-earners) of the Russell 2000® Growth Index<sup>4</sup> are the cheapest since the 1979 inception of the index relative to the Russell 1000® Growth Index (per FactSet).

Market Commentary

During the second quarter of 2023 domestic stocks exhibited continued strength across investment styles, with the broader U.S. equity market up in each of the three months of the quarter. Corporate earnings and employment trends continued to defy skeptics, and there were ongoing signs suggesting that inflation has already peaked. That was welcome news for growth stocks, which have continued to lead the way in this year's market rebound, with the Russell 3000® Growth Index<sup>5</sup> up 12.47% in the quarter and 28.05% year-to-date through June. Meanwhile, the Russell 3000® Value Index<sup>6</sup> was up a more modest 4.03% and 4.98% in the respective quarter and year-to-date periods. Despite the robust rebound for stocks during the first half of this year, there are some potential headwinds ahead. More bearish investors point to concerns over the lagging impact of higher interest rates, the continued slowdown in housing, earnings expectations that have recently moved lower, and geopolitical concerns surrounding the ongoing war between Russia and Ukraine, as well as diplomatic tension between the U.S. and China.

Still, markets continued their rebound from what had been a challenging 2022 in both equity and fixed income markets. The quarter saw strong absolute performance for growth stocks, led by the technology sector, which continued its torrid 2023 performance. Growth styles also benefited from their lower exposure to the energy sector, which has been lagging in recent periods after leading the way since the reopening of the post-pandemic economy. The Russell 1000® Growth Index was the top performer of all major domestic indices during the second quarter, up 12.81%, while the Russell 2000® Growth Index gained 7.05%. This compares favorably to the more modest gains posted by the Russell 1000® Value Index<sup>7</sup> (up 4.07%) and Russell 2000® Value Index<sup>8</sup> (up 3.18%) during the quarter. Corporate operations and earnings among growth-oriented companies have done better than expected, which meant that the much-reduced valuations heading into the new year (and the commensurate more favorable risk-reward tradeoff) rewarded growth-oriented investors that were willing to take the plunge when growth stocks were so out of favor.

Small-cap investing (and small growth in particular) currently stands out as an investment style that continues to look attractive compared to other segments of the market, particularly when comparing relative valuations to large growth stocks. Despite the challenging performance over the past few years, it's important to remember that growth-oriented stocks have continued to shine across market caps over 3, 5, 10, and 15 years, and the current price-to-earnings discount of small growth has set a new record low compared to large growth.

Our team remains focused on potentially exciting opportunities for secular growth companies. We believe the multi-year underperformance of small growth companies that appear materially better off over the secular horizon will allow them to outperform their value counterparts. In our opinion, we remain in the early stages of a secular shift that is altering how consumers, businesses, and employees will interact following the massive "test run" of technology-aided solutions we witnessed during the earlier days of the pandemic, while new technologies such as artificial intelligence are likely to make a material impact in coming years.

Investment Strategy

The Victory RS Select Growth Fund (the "Fund") is guided by our philosophy that sustainable earnings growth drives long-term share price appreciation. Our investment process is focused on finding innovative companies whose core business can grow from a small- or mid-cap company to a mid- or large-cap company over time.

The team seeks companies with products and services that are growing organically, creating new markets or taking market share from existing companies. We are focused on finding companies whose business values can appreciate regardless of the underlying market environment. The Fund is led by the team's chief investment officer, Scott Tracy, along with portfolio managers Steve Bishop, Melissa Chadwick-Dunn, Chris Clark, and Paul Leung. The five co-portfolio managers, as well as three research analysts, serve as sector specialists and are supported by two associates, drawing on strong relationships with industry experts and company management teams.

Together, we conduct over 2,000 company meetings each year through in-person meetings, conference calls, and trade shows. We then back up our findings through discussions with industry leaders and third-party sources. We are long-term investors and seek to establish definable "anchor points," which are quantifiable metrics that help determine a company's potential long-term growth trajectory. Anchor points arise from our analysis of a company's long-term capabilities and performance goals over three to five years. These long-term anchor points serve as guideposts to help us measure a company's progress as it executes its business strategy, regardless of what is taking place in the overall market, and help prevent distractions caused by short-term stock price movements and inevitable market volatility.

Performance Review

The Victory RS Select Growth Fund (Class A Shares, without sales charge) returned 6.54% for the three months ended June 30, 2023, outperforming the Russell 2500™ Growth Index, which returned 6.41%. Fund outperformance relative to the benchmark was driven by stock selection in the Materials & Processing and Energy sectors; stock selection within the Technology sector offset some of the outperformance. This period's performance was aided in part by the relative performance of secular growth stocks as small-mid growth, as defined by the Russell 2500™ Growth Index, materially outperformed small-mid value, as defined by the Russell 2500™ Value Index, 6.41% vs. 4.37%, while large growth, as defined by the Russell 1000® Growth Index, was the best performing style within U.S. equity markets, returning 12.81%. We believe the multi-year underperformance of innovative smaller-cap growth stocks has created an outsized opportunity for smaller-cap growth stocks, as current valuations (defined as the forward price-to-earnings ratio, excluding non-earners) of the Russell 2000® Growth Index are the cheapest since the 1979 inception of the index relative to the Russell 1000® Growth Index (per FactSet).

Top Contributing Sector: Materials & Processing

Within the Materials & Processing sector, the largest driver of outperformance was Building Materials company Builders FirstSource, Inc. (0.80% ending weight). Builders FirstSource manufactures and supplies building materials, manufactured components, and construction services to professional homebuilders, subcontractors, remodelers, and consumers in the United States. We initially purchased Builders FirstSource given the company's positioning as the largest distributor of building materials in a fragmented market, a recent merger with BMC Stock Holdings that provided significant scale, and what at the time was a robust housing market. The stock performed well in the most recent quarter as the company exceeded forecasts given the strength of their product portfolio, distribution footprint, and operational excellence that allowed them to navigate a challenging macroeconomic background.

Top Detracting Sector: Technology

Within the Technology sector, the largest driver of recent underperformance was Semiconductors & Components company MACOM Technology Solutions, Inc. (1.67% ending weight). MACOM designs and manufactures analog semiconductor solutions for use in wireless and wireline applications. We initially purchased the stock given its steady revenue growth and expanding earnings driven by the company's diversified product portfolio, strong execution in what had been a supply-constrained environment, and a robust product pipeline within the Industrial and Defense market. The stock underperformed in the most recent quarter given weaker-than-expected guidance, which fell substantially below consensus given short-term end demand weakness in the data center telecom markets as customers who were previously supply-constrained had excess inventory, delaying new orders.

Market and Strategy Outlook

Reduced concerns regarding inflation, logistical issues resulting from the Ukraine-Russia war, and the impact of higher interest rates have eased investor uncertainty in recent months. We expect the recent decrease in market volatility and improved stability in economic data to continue in the coming quarters. As the economy and markets recover, we see abundant opportunity across sectors, industries, and market caps. Certain areas of the economy appear better positioned to adapt and grow, while company valuations vary significantly.

We are optimistic about the productivity of workers and consumers, as well as business and residential investment, as we approach year-end.

In the current investment landscape, there is a notable opportunity for secular growth companies within the small-cap growth universe. Despite their relative underperformance since November 2020, smaller-cap secular growth companies have displayed continued strength in their underlying fundamentals. We anticipate this strength to persist, especially given the bounce back in the most recent quarter with better-than-expected execution and performance. Conversely, more cyclical companies may face headwinds as valuations have caught up to fundamentals after a strong run since late 2020.

Overall, while some uncertainty remains, the market environment in the second quarter of 2023 is expected to be more stable. We believe lower inflation, resolved logistical issues, and the anticipation of reaching peak investment rates sooner rather than later will influence investment decisions and that opportunities will emerge in sectors and industries that demonstrate resilience and sustained growth. We feel that secular growth companies within the growth universe are particularly attractive due to their strong fundamentals and potential for continued outperformance.

All investing involves risk, including potential loss of principal. In addition to the normal risks associated with investing, investments in small and mid-size companies typically exhibit higher volatility. Investments concentrated in an industry or group of industries may face more risks and exhibit higher volatility than investments that are more broadly diversified over industries or sectors. Technology companies may be adversely affected by economic downturns, short product cycles, aggressive pricing, market competition, and government regulation. International investments may involve risk of capital loss from unfavorable fluctuation in currency values, from differences in generally accepted accounting principles, or from economic or political instability in other nations. The Fund is also subject to liquidity risk, which is the risk that the Adviser may not be able to sell certain securities at an advantageous time or price, which may adversely affect the Fund.

The value of your investment is also subject to geopolitical risks such as wars, terrorism, environmental disasters, and public health crises; the risk of technology malfunctions or disruptions; and the responses to such events by governments and/or individual companies.
